In u and w the semiangular form occurs twice. Pupils readily recognize two forms or parts in these letters. In w, the last part is made somewhat narrower than the first, by giving the third up-stroke the slant of the main lines, nearly. By some writers the first part of w is made narrower than the first part of u, and the two parts made about equal in width; by others, the w is explained as being the u with last part narrowed, the first part being the same width in each. Note.--If you teach in a grade where pupils are old enough to use No. 2, Short Course, or Grammar Course (from nine to eleven), you should give movement-drills for the small letters from Appletons Primary Movement Book, or Book A. A movement-book to accompany the regular numbers is a most...
