Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.From the Introduction-- This book is about how to live well with people who deny our core beliefs, or whose actions we consider immoral, or who have traumatized us. Such people may be our spouses or kin, or international enemies. Our societies are polarized-in the United States around issues such as abortion, sexuality, race, red-blue, and Christianity-Islam. Our polarization is fed by media which play on our fears to gain our attention. Political leaders rouse their base instead of speaking effectively to people on the other side, indeed they are chosen for their ability to denigrate. We have a political dynamic that says I win only if my opponents lose. This book is about how to depolarize but still get what we need. Without violence. Many of us have a deep faith that, when all is said and done, our deep needs for freedom and justice can only be won by violence-that the sole effective rejoinder to oppression is violence, that those who won't kill to defend their rights don't deserve them, and certainly won't obtain them. This book offers a new nonviolent weapon, and tries to sort out when one should run, when one should use violence, and when one should use the new weapon. This book presents a theology that doesn't talk about the hereafter. Rather, the issue is how to heal this world. The great religions have a common shortcoming. They've been around for millennia and have shaped whole civilizations, and yet violence still ravages this earth. Arguably, the spread of violence would be far worse without the great religions, and equally arguably, religion has been a root cause of...
