No! not the dog that watched my household hearth, Escaped that night of blood, upon our plains! All perished! I alone am left on earth, To whom nor relative nor blood remains. No! not a kindred drop that runs in human veins! - Gertrude of Wyoming. Among the notable Indian chiefs who figure prominently in Canadian history, a high position must be given Joseph Brant, or, as he is known by his Indian appellation, Thayendagea. His period of activity was at the latter end of the 18th century, being a sort of Black Douglas during the American revolutionary war, and while he never figured in any battles of consequence, his many predatory campaigns among the outlying settlements of the revolutionists harassed the enemy to no little extent. His name alone was a terror and menace. Legends of his fiendish cruelty and wanton disregard for human life existed for years in the Ohio region of the United States, and it has not been until of late that his character has been shown in its true light. Then, when it is taken into consideration that his was the Indians conception of the value of human life, a heritage from hundreds of savage red-skinned forefathers, the tolerance and consideration shown at times is remarkable. To understand his character one must look at his life. He was...
