Moving a little listlessly up the broad uncarpeted stairs toward the bedroom she shared with her sister, the girl scarcely noticed the older woman's presence. She was hoping that Alice had not yet returned and that she might have a few moments to herself. Miss Patricia opened the attack with her usual vigor. What do you mean, Sally, by going off this afternoon, knowing that I particularly needed your help? You must understand that it is highly improper for a young girl to tramp about over this French country alone. Even if Polly Burton has permitted you Camp Fire girls the most extraordinary amount of freedom, she surely has realized this and warned you against such indiscretion. There is no way of guessing into what difficulty you may have already managed to entangle yourself! Sally felt herself flushing until her clear skin was suffused with glowing color. I am sorry, Miss Patricia, she said, but remember that I am not a child and cannot have you speak to me as if I were a disobedient one. I have been for a walk and But fortunately Sally was not required to complete her sentence. Suddenly Mrs. Burton had appeared out of her bedroom and began to hurry downstairs. Sally! she called with a suggestion of appeal in her voice. The excitement over your disappearance is my fault, so please don't you and Aunt Patricia quarrel. A little while ago when I returned home and Mrs. Toinette told me that you had gone out alone and she did not know in what direction, why, I became uneasy. You will...
